MAC BRIEFING

1 Gatober 1957

PHILIPPINES

- I. Philippine election campaign is heating up as it enters homestretch; voting is set for 12 November.
 - A. At stake will be presidency and vice presidency as well as 8 senatorial seats (out of 24) and all 102 meats of House of Representatives.
- II. President Carlos P. Garcia still seems to have inside track in field of four major presidential candidates.
 - A. This is due primarily to the advantages he holds as the incumbent, and to the fact that his Nacionalista Party is the most strongly entrenched political organization in the country.
- III. Garcia, however, has been an uninspiring candidate and is vulnerable to charges of corruption.
 - A. There are indications, for instance, of menkey business in the issuance of import and export kicenses and Garcia henchmen have attempted to put the squeeze on local Chinese and American businessmen.

- IV. Carcia has also allowed himself to be saddled with an unsavory running-mate in 45-year-old José Laurel, Jr., who often has parroted the anti-American sentiments of his father.
 - A. He is only one of six brothers to enter politics; was successful lawyer in father's firm before election to House of Representatives in 1941; became Speaker in '54; hopes for presidency in '61.

- C. This reputation has solidified the Roman Catholic hierarchy against him, and several observers feel that Laurel may be defeated even if Carcia wims.
- V. The opposition Liberal ticket of José Tule and Diosdado Macapagal, while it has considerable strength on populous Luzon, appears to be making little, if any, headway.
 - A. Yulo is also proving to be a colorless candidate. The party's main attraction has been movie star Rogelio de la Ross, a senatorial candidate, who is always the last speaker at party rallies.
 - B. The Liberals still bear the stigms of the corrupt Quirino regime and Yulo himself is under fire as a result of some of his financial transactions.

- VI. Emerging as possibly the major threat to Garcia is the candidate of the new Progressive Party, Manuel Manshan. (Vice-presidential candidate is businessman Vicente Araneta.)
 - A. Labeled by the Manila press as the "knight errant" of the Magsaysay crusade, Manahan has stirred maexpected public enthusiasm in many key areas.
 - 1. Some observers may that a recent rally in Manila outdrew a similar Magsaysay affair in 1953.
 - B. Manshan forces, despite their identification with Magsayany's pelicies, face stiff uphill fight to overcome such handicaps as lack of party organisation, shortage of funds, and the power of local bosses most of whom are Magionalista officials.
- VII. The fourth candidate, ultranationalist Senator Claro Recto, has considerable support from influential nationalist circles, but is believed to lack the mass support to make him a serious threat.
 - A. His running-mate, Senator Lorenzo Tanada, however, is proving to be a stronger contender for the vice-presidency than was anticipated.
